Shields and Swanson, democrats, and Senator McCumber, republican. Senator Harding, republican, was paired in favor of the resolution with Senator Pomerene, democrat, against it.

Resolution Makes Reservation.

A resolution reserving the right of the American Congress to determine the justness of the obligations im-posed upon this country under the much-discussed section 10 of the Jeague of nations covenant was mean-while introduced today by Senator Sterling, republican, South Dakota.

Senator Lodge Moves to Strike Out

Senator Lodge made the motion to strike out section 5 of the resolution, which would establish a policy for the United States in case of threatened future wars in Europe. He made the motion on the ground that the policy might bring about "entangling alliances." The motion was lost at first on a tie vote. Senator Fall, however, later moved to reconsider the vote and supported the motion. He gave notice, however, that he would feel at liberty in the Senate to vote against striking out section 5.

Moses, all republicans, voted in the affirmative, and Senators Hitcheock, Williams, Swanson, Pittman, Smith, democrats, and McCumber, republican, in the negative.

The leak hearings were to have shown some alleged improper connection between Wall street and the peace treaty, but if it had been sought to develop carefully the status of international finance with relation to European credits it would have been found that big bankers, acting in behalf of the investing public of America, will be vitaly interested in Europe's financial status, as will a few million Americans who own liberty bonds.

much concern to bankers. Interesting suggestions were made at the leak hearings looking to a combination of all the banking and industrial interests of America in financing Europe, or rather in stabilizing her economic conditions by the extension of private credits. The leak committee might have found out had it pursued this line of thought in what a serious plight Europe finds itself, how much in need of American goods are European peoples and what an opportunity is offered to make America's expanded war facilities meet European demands and thus give employment to more people in this country and keep wages higher. But that line of reasoning might have developed arguments for the league of nations and the early ratification of the peace treaty. (Copyright, 1919, by N. Y. Evening Post, Inc.)
